

After the sleeping tents were set up and dinner dishes washed, the emigrants could relax at evening camp. Families would take care of the sick, tell stories or share information about the Trail. Fiddle music, singing, or writing in journals also helped the emigrants relax at the end of the day.